A1 Teaching English as a Lingua Franca – Why, What and How?

Judith Mader, Rudi Camerer

There can be no doubt that English is the world's language No. 1, but it is still not entirely clear what this means for teaching and learning. It cannot be enough to teach British or American English (or even both) as often teachers and learners do not know which English is needed. So, what do we teach and how?

In this workshop, we will show you how the development of English as a global lingua franca affects all areas of our teaching from the "basics" of vocabulary, grammar, pronunciation and spelling to which methods to use. The new Companion Volume to the Common European Framework of Reference of Languages (2018 / 2020) provides many valuable insights. We expect discussion and active participation!

A2 The Coaching Approach

Liz Jolliffe

What is coaching? And what does it have to do with language training? Liz will explain what coaching is and how you and your students can reach your goals (language or otherwise) effectively using self-reflection methods. Coaching methods can be used in many areas of language training, e.g. student testing, getting rid of fear, intercultural competence or analysing different areas of your students' lives (job, time management, happiness etc.). Liz will also discuss how coaching can help you as a trainer to be more effective and deal with different situations in class, such as difficult students. She will also go into the power of self-coaching and give you the opportunity to practice coaching methods you can use without too much difficulty in class.
